Excerpt: . . . 10 CHAPTER XI. FREEDOM OF WOBSHIP. 1566. The Edicts suspended--The Sectaries--The Public Preachings--Attempt to suppress them--Meeting at St. Trond--Philips Concessions. On quitting Brussels, the confederates left there four of their number as a sort of committee, to watch over the interests of the league. The greater part of the remainder, with Brederode at their head, took the road to Antwerp. They were hardly established in their quarters in that city, when the building was surrounded by thousands of the inhabitants eager to give their visitors a tumultuous welcome. Brederode came out on the balcony, and, addressing the crowd, told them that he had come there, at the hazard of his life, to rescue them from the miseries of the Inquisition. He called on his audience to take him as their leader in this glorious work; and as the doughty champion pledged them in a goblet of wine which he had brought with him from the table, the mob answered by such a general shout as was heard in the furthest corners of the city. (l) Thus a relation was openly established between the confederates and the people, who were to move forward together in the great march of the revolution. Soon after the departure of the confederates from Brussels, the regent despatched an embassy to Madrid, to acquaint the king with the recent proceedings, and to urge his acquiescence in the reforms solicited by the league. The envoys chosen were the baron de Montigny,...
